THE WATERTOWN ROAD.

Nobody will question the desirability of building a road to Watertown. The matter is one entirely of means. There are many claims on the available funds older than this one. People in various residence sections, who have been paying taxes on their homes for years, are needing streets. Large amounts have been expended on the island belt road, in consequence of which there is no surplus over the regular appropriations for roads and bridges left. The Nuuanu avenue improvement has in the meantime been promised for this half yearly period, besides other important road work within the city proper. If Fort street is to be paved this year, the cost must come out of the regular appropriation for roads. Nevertheless, if the road committee can produce a plan whereby the Watertown road can be built this year, without sacrificing other improvements having priority, it will deserve public applause.

It is understood that the War Department is going to construct good streets within the naval station reservation at Pearl Harbor, with which the proposed county road to Watertown from a point on the Ewa road would connect. Thus the new town will become a pretty suburb of Honolulu, the drive to which is bound to be popular.

Those who rendered a verdict on the bare allegation of the indictment in the case of Senator Bristow's charge against Senator Aldrich, may not have the satisfaction of seeing judgment entered according to the verdict in the high court of public opinion. Senator Aldrich points out that the changes in the rubber schedule were suggested by the tariff experts of the Treasury department. If therefore he benefits, as a director in a rubber company, from the five per cent raise in the duty on rubber manufactures, the fact is irrelevant to any question of his legislative integrity. The trouble with the insurgents, relative to tariff revision, is that they have no coherent plan of their own to present. One cries one thing and another something else, to suit the sections where they respectively want votes.

An immense export trade in mules from California to Fiji, for the sugar plantations there, has sprung up. Some months ago a sailing vessel was chartered and loaded with 1100 mules, which were landed in the Fiji Islands at a great profit to those who handled the venture. Lately orders were received for another cargo of 1000 animals, and several agents proceeded to buy them in San Joaquin County. Trade returns for the eleven months ended May 31 this year indicated a falling off in the importation of mules from the mainland to Hawaii, which may mean a gradual process toward a situation where this Territory will raise all the mules it needs. The number of head for the eleven months was 610, and the value $121,430, against 744 and $147,305 respectively for the corresponding period ended in 1909. If Hawaii once reached the stage of supplying the home demand for this useful beast of burden, the prospect of also raising a surplus for export would be close at hand. Animals bred here, it may be supposed, would be peculiarly adapted to countries having approximately similar climate.

NEVADA OPINION ON PROPOSED HAWAIIAN POLICY.

The Goldfield Tribune comments, as an "example for Nevada to emulate," the policy lately mooted by Governor Frear to devote the funds from the conservation and immigration tax, or such funds as now go to the procuring of immigrants—"to the purchase of homesteads and implements, building of pipe lines, putting up fences, and preparing the ground for cultivation," somewhat after what the Canadian railroads have been doing for the past five years. Only the Nevada paper makes, or perhaps copies, the error of saying that the Hawaiian legislature has initiated such a movement. The legislature of 1909 indeed enacted the scheme for raising funds for conservation and immigration, by a special income tax, but a proposition of financial aid to homesteaders fell through. A wrong impression is also held by the Nevada paper, when it apparently takes it that the immigration scheme has been abandoned in favor of that to aid homesteaders. While the Russian immigration has been stopped or suspended, the local government is going ahead with a fresh effort to procure Portuguese immigrants from the Azores. And whatever may be said of the proposal to offer ready-made homesteads to settlers, nothing can be done in that line without the action of the legislature, which can not be had before next year. However, outside opinion on such a proposition ought to be welcome just now on the eve of the election of a new legislature. What the Nevada paper says upon the Hawaiian example is good, solid argument for the people of Hawaii in favor of the most liberal policy that can be devised for settling these islands with intelligent and enterprising producers. This is the conclusion of the Tribune's article:

This is an example for some of the Western States to follow. Nevada has tens of thousands of acres of lands overgrown with sage-brush that means a soil so fertile that after the first clearing it will begin to repay the busy settler at a rate that double discounts anything that can be offered anywhere on the American continent. The school lands are passing into the hands and control of syndicates that are holding them for appreciation arising either from the development of water by themselves or the cultivation of adjoining sections. The insignificant revenue accruing today from the sale of school lands in Nevada with payments extending over long periods of time, suggests a wiser and more comprehensive plan for the utilization of the native resources. If it pays Hawaii to advance money to settlers on the unquestioned security of the lands, thus populating the islands with a thrifty race of citizens, there is no reason why the rule should not apply here in an empire of mining camps that are importing most of their produce from other states. It took a long time for Utah to arrive at the same conclusion, but that State today has more productive acres per capita than any other mining state. Moreover, the prices obtained by farmers are better than could be had elsewhere, and the consumer is equally benefited by a cheaper supply of commodities than either Montana, Idaho, Nevada or Colorado.

Uncle Walt

The Poet Philosopher

Sing me something low and tender, sing it softly, Susan Jane, for I could not bear the splendor of a loud heroic strain. In the beauty of the gloaming when the gold is in the west, and the airships cease their drowsing (that's a word I've just impressed), when the glowing stars are watching from the skies they long have lit, and I sit here slowly scratching where the doggone chiggers bit, let your song be sweet and swaying,—that will give my soul repose, while I scratch, with one hand spraying chigger lotion 'neath my clothes. Sometimes when the day is dying, and the mystic breezes blow, and my world-worn heart is sighing for the rest it may not know, of the stars I ask this question: "Why were chiggers ever born? They are worse than indigestion, fiercer than an aching corn. They are worse than jumping measles, than a bunion on the tongue; in the name of toads and teazles, why were chiggers ever sprung?" Sing a song of vanished faces and of happy days at home, while I scratch the itching places with a good stiff curry-comb.

BIG TRUST DEED FILED YESTERDAY

By a deed of trust filed yesterday, the Kaimuki Land Company, of which Mr. Chas. Stanton is manager, transfers its Kaimuki or Ocean View property to the Trent Trust Company, who will in future act as selling agents.

The Kaimuki Land Company will continue the sale of the property as heretofore, the Trent Trust looking out for the office end of the business.

The move is made as a matter of convenience to the Kaimuki Land Company, the officers of which are very busy men.

The land included in the trust foots up six or seven hundred lots.

SPECIAL RATES.

The management of the Haleiwa Hotel invites all of the island teachers to spend a few days at that famous hotel before going back to their homes on the other islands. He has fixed a rate that brings a vacation at Haleiwa within reach of anyone. The hard work of the summer school necessitates the teachers building up for the fall campaign and there is no better place to secure results than Haleiwa.
